I like economics because it provides some tools to think about a lot of decisions we make, including personal ones like where to live, what to do for a living, or who to marry. But these decisions also include broader ones...that governments make, like what to do with the healthcare system, environmental regulation, and the education system. So these tools are very flexible in that sense, but also they are very rigorous and logical and organized.

-Ajin Lee, Assistant Professor